

CDP Presents: Deployment, military stress, and military children's well-being: A review of the evidence and a consideration of the healthy warrior effect

4/22/2025

A Live, Interactive Webinar

Description:

This program will review research findings on military deployments, military stress, and links with children's well-being across domains (i.e., mental and behavioral health, care-seeking, maltreatment). Findings from the Millennium Cohort Program will also be discussed with a consideration of what these Department of Defense studies can tell us about child and adolescent functioning in the face of military stress, focusing on the entire family unit and relevant theoretical approaches that may elucidate mechanisms behind family adjustment. Finally, we will ponder the healthy warrior effect and how this may help us to understand mixed results across research studies, extending these applications to clients in their unique contexts across military, family, and developmental spheres.

Total CE Credits: 1.5

Total Contact Hours: 1.5

Learning Objectives:

Following the training, attendees will be able to:

1. Evaluate the evidence supporting or refuting links of deployment with domains of child adjustment
2. Analyze the complexity of military children's environment with an emphasis on sources of vulnerability and strength that may occur due to military, family, or developmental factors

Target Audience: For behavioral health providers who treat military personnel, veterans, and their families.

Instructor Biographies:

Sabrina Richardson, PhD

Sabrina Richardson, PhD is a developmental psychologist interested in child adaptation to military and non-military risk, with a particular emphasis on relationship processes of resilience. She has worked at the Naval Health Research Center for the past eight years as part of the Millennium Cohort Family Study and more recently, as part of the Study of Adolescent Resilience. She also heads the Family Study child program area, coordinating child-focused projects. Among her topics of study, Sabrina has focused on military spouse adjustment to and readiness for future deployments, marital stability among military spouses, child maltreatment among military parents, and child well-being during the separation from service. Most recently, Sabrina has been studying military child mental and behavioral well-being among vulnerable groups (i.e., within married versus single parent families and across racial/ethnic group) in the newest panel of Family Study participants.
