

Potential Moral Injury: Examples of Analogous Events or Circumstances

MILITARY	HEALTHCARE DURING COVID-19
Giving orders during combat that result in the injury or death of a fellow service member or innocent civilians.	Giving clinical orders or establishing protocols that result in the death of colleagues or patients.
Feeling let down when the chain of command does not provide you with adequate reinforcements.	Feeling let down because you are working with insufficient resources or staffing, especially when you perceive this was avoidable.
Putting a colleague in danger because of your own indecision or a choice that was made.	Putting patients or colleagues in danger because of your inexperience, indecision, or working outside your normal competency.
Following orders that were illegal, immoral or against the Rules of Engagement or Geneva Convention.	Following clinical decisions by others that the individual believes were unethical, immoral, or against guidance from registered professional bodies.
Being told that you are unable to treat a seriously ill civilian (especially someone you perceive as vulnerable, such as a child) brought to the gates of your camp, who subsequently dies.	Having to choose which of two equally sick patients is provided with specific care, one of whom does not survive, because of the non-availability of healthcare equipment.
